

Website Name: Pixel Renaissance

Description: A blog about video games and their relationship to real-world themes, cultural movements, and society. The website mainly discusses how cultural shifts, from feminist movements to LGBTQ+ advocacy, have shaped narratives, characters, art styles, and gameplay mechanics within video games. Alongside blog posts, there is a storefront page where people can purchase branded products with the website name as well as references to blog posts. Readers can make comments and article suggestions on our contact page, which includes links to our social media. To learn more about the website, there is an about page that gives a summary of our website's purpose.

Pages: Home, About, Blog, Store, Contact

Data stored: We will be storing a list of blog posts (post name, post lead, author name, content, pictures) and products (product name, description, price, artist). The website administrator is the only person who can add, edit, and delete posts and products, so we will have user accounts with login security to prevent unauthorized access. Also, this will allow people to view their purchases and favorite blog posts.